

You've nearly finished your will. Here's how to make it legal.

Any questions? Email us on hello@farewill.com

1 Read your will and print it in black and white

- Read it carefully and make sure you understand it. If anything is unclear, contact us.
- Staple it securely in the top left corner. You don't need to include this instruction page, but if you do attach it, that's ok – don't try and remove it.

Order a printed copy for just £6

You can order a printed copy of your will at any time, in your Farewill account.

2 Choose your witnesses

Choose two witnesses to watch you sign your will and sign it themselves.

Your witnesses should be:

- Over 18
- Not a beneficiary in your will
- Someone you know and trust
- Not married to a beneficiary

If you are elderly, recently bereaved or have a terminal, mental or other serious illness, the law recommends asking a medical practitioner, such as a GP, to act as one of your witnesses. This can help to prove you understand what you are signing.

3 Get together with your witnesses and sign your will

Get together with both witnesses. Turn to the 'signatures and witnesses' page. Everyone should use a pen. You sign it first, with both witnesses watching. Each witness should write their details in capital letters and add their signature. If someone makes a mistake, start again if you can, or everyone should write their initials next to the error.

4 Store your will and let your executors know where it is

Your will is legal! Do not send your signed will back to us. Store it somewhere safe at home and let your executors know where they can find it. Alternatively, for a small fee, you can store a will with the government's Probate Registry. Search for their details online.

Guidance on the General Provisions

Your will contains provisions relating to the responsibilities of your executors and trustees. These provisions are under the heading General Provisions.

At Farewill we include a set of general provisions, that have been professionally drafted and approved by STEP, and are used widely by other professional will writers and solicitors. STEP is the Society of Trust and Estate Practitioners, a global professional association that promotes high professional standards in this area of law.

It's important you understand all of your will, including the STEP provisions.

The will contains a reference to the STEP Standard Provisions (3rd Edition). These provisions give the executors a number of technical and routine provisions and powers to help them to administer the estate properly. The full text of the STEP Standard Provisions is published on the website of STEP at www.step.org/public-policy/step-standard-provisions. We can supply you with a printed copy of the provisions.
